Albion, and Bergion, Two gigantes the sonnes of Neptune, slaine by Hercules.
Albion, (The moste auncient name of this Ile) conteineth Englande and Scotlande: of the beginning of which name haue bēn sundrie opiniōs: One late feigned by him, whiche first printed the Englishe chronicle, wherein is neither similitude of trouth, reasone, nor honestie: I meane the fable of the fiftie doughters of one Dioclesian kyng of Syria, where neuer any other history maketh mencion of a kyng of Syria, so named. Also that name is Greke, and no parte of the language of Syria. Moreouer the coming of theim from Syria in a shippe or boate without any marynours thorowe the sea called Mediterraneum, into the occean, and so finally to finde this Ile, and to inhabite it, and haue generation by diuels, is both impossible, and much reproche for this noble Realme, to ascribe hir first name and habitation, to suche inuentours. An other opinion is (whiche hath a more honeste similitude) that it was named Albion, ab albis rupibus, of white rockes, because that vnto them, that come by sea, from the east or southe, the bankes and rockes of this Ile doe appeare whyte. Of this opinion haue I moste meruayle, because it is written of great learned men. First Albion is no latin worde, nor hath the analogie, that is to saie, the proporcion or similitude of latine. For who hath founde this syllable, on, at the ende of a latin word. And if it should haue bēn so called for the whyte colour of the rockes, men would haue called called it Alba, or Albus, or Album. In Italy were townes called Alba, and in Asia a countrey called Albania, and neither of them toke their beginning of white rockes or walles, as ye may reade in bookes of Geographie: nor the water of the ryuer called Albis, semeth any whiter than other water. But if where auncient remembraunce of the beginning of thinges lacketh, it may be lefull for men to vse their coniectures, than may myne be as well accepted as Plinies (although he incomparably excelled me in wisedome & doctrine) specially if it may appere, that my cõiecture shal approch more nere to the similitude of trouth. Wherfore I will also sette forth mine opinion, onely to the intent to exclude fables, lacking eyther honestie or reasonable similitudes. Whan the Greekes began first to prosper, and their cities became populous, & ware puissaunt, they which trauailed on the seas, and also the yles in the seas, called Hellespontus, Aegeum, and Creticũ, after that thei knewe perfectly the course of sailynge, and had founden therby profyte, they by little and little attempted to serche & finde out the commodities of outwarde countrees: and like as Spaniardes & Portugalles haue late done, they experienced to seke out countreis before vnknowen. And at laste passyng the streictes of Marrocke, they entred into the great Ocean sea, where they foũd dyuers and many Iles. Among which they perceiuing this Ile to be not onely the greatteste in circuite, but also most plentuouse of euery thing necessary to man, the ayre most holsome and temperate, the earth moste apte to bringe forth all thinges that maie sustcine, the flesshe of beoffes and muttons most swete and delicate, the wull moste fine, not lacking any kinde of mettal, hauyng abundance of woodde and timber to builde with, also great & fayre riuers, with great lakes or méres of freshe water, and as well in them as in the sea, wherwith the countrey is enuyroned, was great plentie of fishes, of diuers sortes moste apt to be eaten: they wonderynge & reioysinge at their good and fortunate arriuall, named this yle in greke Olbion, which in englishe signifieth happy, in latine Fœlix, like as part of Arabia, which is most fertile, is called Arabia fœlix. But in processe of time, by resort of sundrie people hauing diuers languages, no meruayle though one letter were chaunged, & the first letter, O, turned into A. And so for Olbion, it was at the laste called Albion, which worde hath no maner of signification. This chaunging of letters is not vnlikely, sence at this presente time the northern men of this realme do vse A, in word, where southern men vse O, as a bane, a stane, a bare, a baud: for a bone, a stone, a bore, a bond. And among the Greekes were like alterations of letters. And it may be more easily borne, ỹ one vowel may be chaunged in a word, & specially A, into O, whiche in somme mans mouth, sowneth often times like, thã that a syllable impertinent to the proportion of latine, should be vnaptly added to. Not withstandynge Pomponius Mela maketh mention of a gyaunt called Albion, whom Hercules slewe in Gallia, which was sonne of Neptunus, who moughte with more reasõ be demed the first gener of this name to this yle, than that the other surmises should be likely. If any man can finde matter more certaine, concernyng the beginnyng of this Ile, I wyll not be offended, but congratulate with him his good fortune and diligence.

Plinies

Alexander, The name of many noble princes, but among other one mosse excellent, the sonne of Philip kynge of Macedonie, who in his childehode was brought vp by Aristotle in learninge, wherin he profited wonderfully, & was of suche courage, that after the death of Philip his father, beyng but. xx. yeres olde, he enterprised to conquere all the worlde. And first gat Illyria, now called Slauonia: And after subuerted the citie of Thebes, brought in subiection al Grēce, entred into Asia, and vanquished the great and puissaunt Darius king of Persia, & had his mother, his wife, and daughter prisoners, and neuer would company with any of them, notwithstandyng they were exceding fayre and beautifull. Finally he conquered India, & all the easte parte of the worlde. And all this did he in little more then. xii. yeres. But when he had pacified the worlde from all rebellions, he fell into suche crueltie & pryde (seeing his most trusty counsaylours in his fury, & commaunding him selfe to be called a god) that he became odious to his owne people: who desiring his destruction, at the laste whā he was in his most glory at the citie of Babylon (where he abode the ambassadours frō al realmes) at supper with one of his phisitions, was poisoned by drinkyng out of a cup, whiche was supposed to be made of an horses hoofe, and was thought to be done by the deuise of Aristotle, sometyme his maister, and Antipater his lieutenaunt in Macedonia, whom a little before he had greuously threatned. Thus Alexander, abounding in excellente vertues & notable vices, after moste happie fortune, by his outrageuse pride & crueltie, shortned his lyfe, beynge at his death little aboue. xxxiii. yeres olde, which was afore the incarnation of Christ. 322. yeres.

Alexander Severus, Was emperour of Rome, the yere of our lorde. 224. A man from his childhod of wonderful grauitie and prudence. Brennus, A capitaine of the Galles, that buylded the citie Brennon by Uenice, whiche afterwarde was called Uerone. This manne breakynge into Italy with a mightie armie, ouerthrew the Romaines at the ryuer Allia, and afterwarde preffing on to the citie, toke it and burned it all fauing the capitoll or caftell, whether the youth of the nobilitie fledde for fuccour. When they aflaulted that alfo, the Romaines agréed with them, that for a certaine number of talentes in golde, they fhould rayfe their fiege and departe. Therefore whyle the golde was weighing, the capitaine Brennus pulled out his fwourde, and commaunded them to counterpoyfe that with golde alfo. But when the Romaines refufed it as a matter vntuft, and the Galles ftode in altercation with them, in the meane time Camillus a banyfhed man, that in his abfence was made Dictatour, had gathered a companie of thē that fledde out of the citie, and fodainly fetteth vpon the Galles. They vpon the fodayne beyng much abafhed, to fafe themfelues, left the gold, and with great loffe of men betoke them felues to flight. Camillus, eagrely purfuing thē, draue them cleane out of Italie. Brennus not long after entringe into the temple of Apollo at Delphos to fpoyle it, by the difpleafure and reuengement of the God, killed himfelfe.

Briffeus, a, um, Of Brifa the furname of Bacchus.
Britannia, The moffe noble Ile of the worlde, wherin be conteined Englande and Scotlande. It lieth from Germany weffe: from Fraunce and Spayne, weft northweffe. The fourme thereof is like a triangle, and (as feme haue writtē) like the blade of a gleyue. The lengthe is extended into the North to the furthermoft part of Scotlande, called Calidonia, which Plinius, Solinus, and Martianus, doe agrée to be. 800. miles. The bredth of it (after Martianus) is. 300. Italyan myles. The narroweft dyftaunce betweene this yle and Caleys fandes (called of Plinie Gefforiacum in Gallia) is. 50. Italyan myles. It is nowe geffed to be. 30. englyfhe myles. Of the firffe naming of this yle is yet no certain determinatiō, for afmuch as there remayneth no auncient hiftory, making thereof remembraunce, the olde Brytons bokes (fuche as weare) beynge all deftroyed by the Saxons: who indeuoured themfelfe to extinct vtterly the honorable renoume of the name of Brytons, lyke as the Gothes delte with the Romains. Alfo the part of Titus Liuius, where the conqueft of Brytayne is remembred, with the hiftories of Julius Rufficus, & dyuers other noble writers, that wrate fpecially of this countrey, are vtterly perifhed. Suche as remaine, as the commentaries of Julius Cæfar, Cornelius Tacitus, Diodorus Siculus, and thei that wrate of Cofmographie, haue omitted the originall beginning of the name. The hiftory of Gildas the Bryton can not be founde, who was after the Saxons had inuaded this realme: and therfore mought lacke fuche bokes, as fhoulde beffe inftructe hym. As for Beda femeth to haue fēn nothing written of that matter. For where he fayeth, that this yle toke the name Britannia, of the inhabitauntes of Britayne in Fraunce, it is nothing lyke to be true. For that countrey was (not long before the tyme of Beda) named Armorica & Armoricus tractus, whan this yle was called of moffe auncient writers Britannia, and (as Solinus writeth) fēmed to bee an other worlde, for as muche as the weft part of Gallia was thought to be the vttermoffe parte of this worlde. Alfo Julius Cæfar writeth, that the places of this yle were vnknowen to Frēchmen fauinge to a fewe marchauntes: and yet they knewe no farther, then the fea coaffe towarde Fraunce. Moreouer the fame Brytons affirme, that it was left among them in remembraunce, that the innermoffe parte of the countrey, was inhabited of them, which had their fyrſt beginning in the ſame yle. This well conſidered, with the auctorité of the wryter, both an excellent prince, and alſo a great learned man, and was himſelfe in this yle, it is not to be doubted, but that he moſt diligently ſearched for the true knowledge of the auncientè thereof. And if he mought haue founden, that the inhabitauntes had come of the ſtocke of Eneas, of whoſe progenie he him ſelfe came, he would haue reioyſed muche, for the proweſſe and valiaunt courage, which he commended in them. Moreouer, that the name came of Brutus (whom our wryters imagined to deſcende of Eneas the Troyane) is no more likely, than that this yle was called Albion of Dioclesians daughter, or of whyte rockes. Al the olde Latine hiſtorians agrè, that the ſonne of Syluius, the ſeconde in ſucceſſion from Eneas, & of them named the ſonne of As-canius, was Eneas, called alſo Sylulus. whereunto the Grèkes do alſo accorde: but they name Sylulus to be brother to Aſcanius, & borne after the death of Eneas, and was therfore called Poſthumus. But neyther the Romaines nor the Grèkes doe write of any man called Brutus, before Julius Brutus, which expelled Tarqui-nius out of Rome. Whiche name was alſo geuè to him (by the ſonnes of Tarquine) in deriſion, becauſe they toke him to be fooliſhe and dul witted. Moreouer, there is ſo muche diuerſitè betwène Britannia and Brutus, that it ſèmeth a-gainſt reaſon, that the one ſhould procède of the other. For if Brutus had bène the geuer of the firſt name to this yle, he woulde haue called it Brutia, or Brutica, rather then Britannia, whiche hath no maner proportiō or analogie with Brutus. But now wil I (as I haue done in the word Albion) declare a reaſonable cauſe of coniecture, why this yle was named Britannia. About. 30. yeres ſence, it hapned in wilſhire, at Jur church aboute two myles from Sariſbury, as men dig-ged to make a foundation, they founde an holow ſtone couered with an other ſtone, wherin they founde a booke, hauinge in it little aboue. xx. lea-ues (as they ſaide) of very thicke volume, wher-in was ſome thinge written. But when it was ſhewed to prieſtes and chanons, whiche were there, they could not reade it. Wherfore after they had toſſed it from one to an other (by the meanes wherof it was torne) they did neglecte and caſt it aſide. Long after a pèce therof happened to come to my handes: whiche not with-ſtandynge it was all to rente and defaced, I ſhe-wed to maiſter Richard Pace, than chiefe ſecretary to the kynges moſte royal maieſtie, wher-of he exceedingly reioyſed. But becauſe it was partely rent, partely defaced and blourred with weate whiche had fallen on it, he could not finde any one ſentence perfecte. Notwithſtandynge after longe beholdynge, he ſhewed me, it ſèmed that the ſaid booke conteined ſome auncient monument of this yle, and that he perceiued this worde Prytania, to be put for Brytannia. But as that tyme he ſayde no more to me. Afterwarde, I geuyng much ſtudy and diligence to the rea-dynge of hyſtories, conſyderynge whereof this worde Britannia firſt came, fyndyng that all the yles in this parte of the Ocean, were called Britannie, after my firſt coniecture of Albion, remèbrynge the ſayde wrytynge, and by chaunce fyndynge in Suidas, that Prytania in grèke, with a circumflexed aſpiratiō, doeth ſignifie metalles, fayres and markettes, alſo reuenues belonging to the commune treaſure: I than conceyued this opinion, that the Grèkes flouriſhynge in wiſdome, proweſſe, and experience of ſaylynge, beynge entred into the Ocean ſea, founde in the yles great plenty of tyn, leade, yron, braſſe, and in diuers places golde and ſyluer in great quantitie, they called all thoſe yles by this generall name Prytania, ſignifiyng the place, by ỳ whiche came out of it, as one would ſay, he wèt to market, when he goeth to Antwerpe, or Barrow: or to the fayre, whan he goeth to Sturbridge: or to his reuenues, whan he goeth to any place, from whence his reuenues dooe come. And yet, becauſe this yle excelled all the other in euery condicion, it was of ſome priuately called Albion, that is to ſay, more happy or rycher. This coniecture approcheth more nigh the true ſimi-litude, then the other inuentions, except there be any auncient hiſtory before the tyme of Geffrey of Monmouth or Beda, which may more probably confute that I haue declared. To ſuche wyll I gladly geue place. Finally I thought it alwaies more honourable, to haue receyued the firſt name by ſuche occaſion as I haue reherſed, and the generation of the inhabitaūtes of this lande, to be eyther equall with the moſte auncient, or myxed with the moſt wyſe and valiaunt people of Grèce, banquiſhers and ſubduers of Troianes, than to take the name and firſt generation of a bayne fable, or of a man, if any ſuch were, which after he had ſlayne his father, wandred about the worlde, uncertayne where to dwel. Alſo to aduaunt vs to come of the Troyanes, cauſers of their owne countreis deſtru-cion, by fauourynge the aduoutry of Paris and Helena, of whom neuer procèded any other notable monument, but that they were alſo breākers of theyr othe and promeſſe. Yet this foly is founde almoſte in all people, which contende to haue their progenitours come fyrſt from Troy.

Whiche fantaſie may wel be laughed at, amōge wyſe men. The fayth of Chriſte was fyrſt re-ceiued in this royalme, after the incarnation.

Cæsar, The surname of the house of the Iulians in Rome, eyther because the fyrste of that kothe was cutte out of his mothers wombe, or for that he had Cæsios oculos, terrible glysteryng eyes, or (as some wyll) gray eyes. Of this name moste notable was Julius Cæsar, Consull and companion in office with Bibulus, in the. 695. yere after Rome was builded. In nineteene yeres space this man conquered and subdued to the Romayne empyre all the countrey of Fraunce, bounded within the mountaynes Pyrenei, and the Alpes, with the ryuers Rhodanus and Rhyne. Firſte of all the Romaines, he makynge a brydge ouer Rhyne, assauted the Germaines, and put them to muche scathe. He entred this countrey of Brytayne also, and made a parte of it tributary. In the ende, when he could not obteyne of the Senate, in consyderation of his valiaunt actes, to be chosen Consull in his absence, he tourned his power against his countrey, by force intendynge to wynne that, which by fayre meanes he could not obtayne: therefore he commynge vppon a suddayne without resistance, gotte into his handes Lumbardie, Pice, Umbria, and Tuskane, and caused Pompey to flee out of Italie into Grece. Then, he strikynge backe into Spayne, ouercame there the greate armie that Pompey had lefte in the guydynge of three capitaines, Petreius, Afranius, and Varro. This thynge beynge atchined with such prosperous successe, he wente into Grece against Pompei, whom in a great battaile in the feldes of Pharsalia he ouerthrewe. Afterwarde he vanquished kyng Ptolomie in Aegypt, Scipio and Juba in Affrike, and Pompeies sonne in Spayne, and for his victories triumphed. b. tymes. Of this man and Pompei it was saide, that they weare of so haute courages, that the one could not abyde an equall, the other a superiour: whiche their immoderate affections and desyre of superioritie, brake out in the ende, to a most dreadfull ciuile warre, wherwith al the world almost was vexed and troubled, not onely with the losse of many thousande souldiours, but also of a greatte number of worthy & noble men of great fame and renowme.

Carinthia, A countrey by Duckryke, toyninge vp the southe to the mountaynes Alpes and Italy: On the east and north to Stiria. The election of a newe prynce or gouernour there, is verye straunge. Pius wryteth in his cosmographie, that in the towne called Sanct Viti, is a greate valley, wheare, in a medowe is sette a stone of marble, of a good height, whereupon ascendeth an husbande man, vnto whom that office by inheritance belongeth: On his ryght hande standeth a blacke cowe: on his left hande an yll fauored mare. About him standeth a great multitude of carles. On the other syde of the medowe cometh the duke, accompanied with hys noble men in their robes of estate. Before hym goeth the Earle of Gozitia, the great maister of his house, betweene. xij. banners, bearynge the prynces standerde. The other noble men folowe with the prynce, cladde lyke an husband man, with a sheepecroke in his hande, as he weare a shepeherde. As soone as the carle, on the marble stone, perceiueth him comming, he asketh aloude in the Sclauoyn tounge, who is this, that commeth with so proude a gate? They that stande about, answere: It is the prynce of this countrey. Than sayeth he eftesoones: Is he a ryghtuouse iudge, sekyng for the weale of the countrey, a free man borne, and worthy to haue honour? Is he a true christen man, and defender of Christes faithe? They all answere, yea, he is and shall be. Than saieth the carle, By what ryght may he putte me from this place? Than answereth the Earle of Gozitia: Thou shalte haue for thy place. ix. grotes, these two beastes (the cow and the mare) & the princes apparaile, which he did late put of. Also thi family or kinne shalbe free from all maner of tribute. Than the carle, geuinge the prynce a little blowe on his cheeke, byddeth hym be a good iudge, and commyng downe from the stone geueth him place, and so departeth, taking with him the cow and the mare. Than the prince goeth vp on ỹ stone, and holding a naked swerde in his hande, brandyshing it, turneth to euery parte of the stone, pronouncyng equall iudgement to all the people. Than is there brought to hym colde water in an husbandmans cappe, whiche he drynketh, signifyng that he condemneth drinking of wyne. Than goeth he to a churche thereby: where, after he hath hearde diuine seruice, he putteth of his rustical rayment, and putteth on apparaile of honour. And dynynge with his nobilitie sumptuously, he commeth eftsoones to the medowe, where he heareth matters, and mynistreth iustice. Cato, onis, Was not fyrste a surname, but a name of merite. For the auncient Romaynes called him Cato, that was wyse by muche experience. Of this name, two were moste excellent: Marcus Cato Censorius, because he alwayes vsed the grauitie and rygour that was wont to be in the correctours of maners, called Censores. Also he hymselfe beyng Censor, was aboue all other moste sharpe and rigorous. Valerius Max. wryteth, that he was almost an olde man er he learned learned latine letters, and thã it semeth he was olde er he learned greke. Yet notwithstanding by gathering abridgementes out of Thucydides and Demosthenes workes, he became the greatest oratour of his time, and was called the Romayne Demosthenes. He beyng made Consull, wanne moe cities in Spayne, than he had abodden dayes in that countrey. In whiche iourney he retayned to himselfe, nothing of all that was founde there, but meate and drynke onely. He made his souldiours ryche, geuinge to euery of theim a pounde weight of syluer, saiyng: Better it were, that many Romaynes returned to Rome with syluer, than a fewe with golde. He taught his owne sonne grammer, not withstãding he had a seruaunt called Chylo, an excellẽt grammarian, and taught a great schole, saiyng: It is not cõuenient, if my sonne be slow of learning, he should be rebuked or pulled by the eares of hym, that is of a seruile condicion. He also taught him the ciuile lawes, the exercise of all weapons, to ryde well, to fighte with the fistes, to sustein bothe colde and heate, to leape into waters, and swymme against swifte streames. Being Censor, he spared none estate, whose maners he founde corrupted, or superfluous in lyuing, wherby he brought into the citie a meruelous pmage of vertue. His sentences rehersed by Plutarke be wounderfull: of whiche I wyll remembre three. Lyke as the diers, saied he, dooe die most often that colour, whiche they doe perceiue most men delite in: so young men do most studiously haunte and imbrace that, which thei se olde men and counsaylours haue in moste estimation. He blamed the people of Rome, for that they committed authoritie and offices ofte tymes to one persone, saiyng: They semed not to esteme rule and authoritie, or els they supposed there were but fewe worthy of promotion. The one was a signe of contempt, the other discourage to good wittes, and rebuke to their countrey. Whan the ambassadours were chosen to be sent into Bithynia, of whõ one had ỹ goute, an other peyne in his head, and the thirde tymorus, Cato laughing sayd in the senate: The people of Rome sendeth an ambassade, whiche hath neither fote, head, nor herte. The life of this & of the other Cato, are worthy to be often tymes read, specially of counsailours & men in authoritie. He was before the incarnation. 182. yeres.

Cato Vticensis (so called because he slewe hymselfe in the towne Utica, to whom the other Cato Censorius was great graundfather) shewed a wonderfull cõstaunce and grauitie, euen in his childhode. Seldome mery or seene to laughe, and if he did, it was a very little smylinge: not lyghtly angry, but if he were, he was not sone appesed. He was very studious in all moral philosophie, practising in his actes and liuing, that which he radde of vertue and honestie: and studied eloquence only to the intent, that in counsailing & reasonig, he mought adde vnto philosophy more force and ornament, & yet would he not practise it openly. Whan one saied to him, men dispraise thine obstinate silence, he answered: I force not, so thei dispraise not my liuing: but I wil breake out of this silẽce, whã I can speake that is worthy to be spoken. Being Tribunus militum, he was sent into Macedonie, where with his meruayllouse grauitie, prudence, & peinfulnesse, he made al that were vnder him fierce and hardy against their ennemies, gentyll to their felowes, fearfull to doe iniurie, prompt to get prayses, and hymselfe labouring with theim, vsing his apparayle, fedyng and goyng lyke vnto theim: he contrary to mennes expectations (not withstanding his seueritie) wan the hertes of them, going on fote and talkyng with euery man. He was of such constancie, & so farre from ambition & flatterie, that neither Pompey nor Cæsar, in their chiefe pryde, whã all men, either for dread or fauour, inclined to their desires, coulde perswade him to agree to their mindes, in cases where it semed to be against the weale publike: nother mought any maner menacing or dreadful tohẽs moue him from that cõstancie. In so much, that whã he hearde that Cæsar had vanquished Põpey, & that his frendes would haue sent to Cæsar to desire his fauour, he answered: thei which are vanquished, or haue any wyse trespased, ought to make suite, but he in al his life was neuer vãquished, & in innocencie surmounted Cæsar, who in making warre against his own cõtrey, had condemned himselfe to haue doone that thinge, which he had often denied. Finally not for malice of Cæsar, but because he would not beholde ỹ weale publike destroyed, he slew himselfe at Utica, hauinge with him at supper, the euenинge before, the greatest officers of that citie, & many of his friendes. Also this sentence being spoken amongest other: onely a good man is a free man, all ill men are bonde: whã one happened to reason against it, Cato being therwith chaused, disputed with the other so vehemently and longe, that al men suspected ỹ he would not long lyue. He died before the incarnation. 44. yeres.

tall mans tounge or pen. He lineally descended from the auncient kynges of the Volscians: all be it tyme and occasion wearynge out dignities in bloud, his name continued longe in the state of worshyp. His auncestours were called Ciceróues, because Tullius Appius, a noble kynge of the Volscians, had on his nose, a marke lyke a chiche pease, called Cicer. In his childehode, he so excelled all other children in wytte, that their fathers moued with his fame, went purposely to the schole to beholde and here him. He so profited in the eloquẽce of grécke and latine, that not onely his companions were in a meruaillous admiration of him, but also Apollonius (the most excellẽt oratour at that time) hearing him, & not speaking a great space, saied at last: Truly Cicero, I praise thée, and meruayle at thée: but I lament the fortune of the Grékes, whan I consider, that by thée, learnynge and eloquence, which were left vnto vs onely, are euen now translated vnto the Romaines: which saiyng was afterwarde founde true. For lyke what subtiltée was in Logike, what commoditée in morall philosophie, what secreate knowlage in philosophie natural, he knew it (as Tacitus writeth) and declared it in latine most eloquently. And he beynge but a very ponge man, came to practise in Rome, studied abundantly the ciuile lawes, was meruailously occupied in great weighty causes. And after he was Senatour, was continually (as it séemed) most busy about the weale publyke. Yet he that exactly readeth his workes, shall thinke he neuer dyd any thynge but reade great authours, and write bookes. For there was no philosopher, no oratour, no poete before his tyme that escaped him, as doeth in his bookes sufficiently appére. And yet how many bookes made he? sence we haue not the thirde part of them, yet such as we haue, if any man now did wryte so much, and so well, we shoulde thinke him to haue spente the more parte of his time in wrytynge. And noble Cicero, lorde god how many thinges did he exploite by his wisedome and diligence, in most weighty affayres, as well in warre as peace? how dyd he by his dexteritée and prudence saue the citie & people of Rome from the moste pernicious confederacie and rebellion of Catiline, and other of the nobilitée, whiche went about to destroy the weale publike, and robbe the citie? how preserued he the same citie and people, after the death of Cesar, that they weare not oppressed by Marcus Antonius? For his incomparable actes, the whole Senate and people gaue to him, fyrst before any, the name of father of the countrey. What trouble and misery sustayned he, beynge exyled by the procurement of Clodius, onely for the puttynge of the saide rebelles to death? Such is the reward of people vnstable. Likewise for bryngynge Antonius out of Rome, and by his sharpe orations, causynge him to be pro-

For where it is wel knowen, that of all cōsailours, the one (Scæuola) was moste eloquent: the other (Crassus) was in cōsailing moste excellent. Likewise in all other thinges they were vnlyke one to an other: but so as ye coulde not tell, vnto whiche of them ye woulde wishe to be lyke. For Crassus of all delicate and ioly, was the moste sobre: Scæuola of all that were sobre, was moste freshe & pleasant. Crassus with gentlenesse had sufficient seueritee, in the great seueritée of Scæuola lacked no gentlenes.

He woulde say, he ought not to be called a riche man, except he could with his yerely rente maintcine a legion, which commonly cōteyned 6000. fotemen, and. 500. men of armes. By whiche wordes it may be well supposed, that where Plinie estéemeth the richesse of Crassus to be. 20000. sestertia, which in the rate of our money is. 731065. li. the same summe was the yerely reuenues of Marcus Crassus, euery Sestertium, beynge. vi. li. xi. s. ix. d. ob. whiche reuenues were not onely of his possessiōs, graine, fruite, and cattall, but also of the labours of bondmen, whiche he dyd lette to hyre, they beyng instructed in al maner sciences and artes: of whom weare. 500. carpenters, of all the other a muche greatter numbre. All that they gayned, came to his coffers. Moreouer he practised vsury, lending lightly to all men that would borow, but if they brake promise with him, he was in exactyng thereof extréme and rigorouse. He gatte infinite substaunce by men attayned in the tyme of Sylla. He was excédynge couetouse and vnstable, but vsynge much lyberalitée and affabilitée towarde the people: he was alway in greate estimation amonge them: he was eloquent, and woulde pleade in euery common cause. Finally, beynge stéred with couetousnesse and enuy, at the greate honours that Cæsar and Pompei had obteyned, he procured warre against the Parthians, by whom both he and his sonne with. 30000. Romaynes were slayne, many also were taken, whiche as Plutarche wryteth, hapned by his negligence, beynge more industrious aboute the gatherynge of money, then in gouerninge his army. But for so muche as the monster Sphinx dyd with great cruelté spoyle all the countrey about, nor any other remedy could be fond of that great misery, but that one must dissolue the doubtfull riddle that Sphinx proposed, This Creon caused proclamation to be made ouer all Grece, that who so euer coulde doe it, should haue the olde quéene Iocasta to his wife, and that he woulde willingly also yelde vp the kyngdome of Thebes vnto him. This large offer caused many to attempte the thynge, but whē they could not rightly do it, they weare cruelly slayne by the monster. At the laste Oedypus the vnknowen sonne of Iocasta, moued with the fame hereof, commeth from Corinthe thyther, and by his wiſedome diſſolued the riddle. Whiche thinge Sphinx toke ſo greuouſly, that he caſt himſelfe downe an hyll, and brake his necke. By this meanes Oedipus got the kingdome of Thebes, and vnwittingly maryed his owne mother Iocaſta, whereas he had not long before alſo ignorantly kylled his father Laius. Which thinges when he dyd afterwarde vnderſtande, he conceyued ſo great ſorow that he pulled out his owne eyes, and would alſo oftentimes haue ſlayne himſelfe, had not his daughter Antigone kepte him. Wherefore he willingly wente in baniſhmente to Athens, leauynge his kyngedome to Eteocles and Polynices his two ſonnes, to occupie the ſame by courſe. But when Eteocles beynge the elder, after the firſt yere would not admitte his brother Polynices to reigne, vppon that occaſion great and cruell warre was rayſed betwéne the Thebanes and the Argiues. In whiche, when it happened both the brothers, métynge in the battayle, to be ſlayne eache of other, Creon toke on him the kyngedome agayne. Finally for his outragious cruelté, as well in other thynges, as in murderynge Antigone and Argia, Theſeus of Athens made warre vpon him and ſlue him. Whan Crœſus aſked, who was moſt happie next Tellus, he ſaied, Cleobis and Bitō, which were Argiues, and had a competent lyuynge, and in all games, in prouinge of ſtrengthe, they obteyned the pryce. Crœſus, being abaſhed, ſaid vnto Solon: My friend of Athens, ſetteſt thou ſo little by our felicité, that thou preferreſt before vs theſe priuate perſons? Solon aunſwered: Truely

Crœſus,

Crœſus, in proceſſe of tyme, many thinges are ſéne, which men would not ſée: and many thinges be ſuffered, that men would not ſuffre. And ſpeakyng much of mans calamitée, at the laſt he concluded, ſaiyng: The ende of euery thynge is to be loked on, whereto it ſhall come. For god plucketh vp by ỹ rootes many men, vnto whom he gaue all fortune at pleaſure. Crœſus made hereto no cõtenaunce, but eſtéming Solon for a fole, conſidering he paſſed ſo light vpon thinges which appéred good, let him departe. A good ſpace after, Crœſus by the comforte of Apolloes anſwere at Delphos, attempting warre againſt Cyrus kynge of Perſia, was at the laſt taken of him: who cauſed a great pyle of wood to be made ready, and Crœſus gyued to be ſette on the toppe thereof: Than forthwith Crœſus remembryng the wordes of Solon, that no mã lyuynge was bleſſed, or on all partes happy, lamentynge, cryed: O Solon, Solon, Solon. Whiche Cyrus hearynge, cauſed to be demaunded of him, who it was that he named. Crœſus with muche difficultée tolde what he was, and declared all that before is reherſed. Which whã Cyrus had hearde, recogniſynge himſelfe to be alſo a man, ſore repented, that he went about to burne him, which was equall to him ſelfe in honour and ryches: and commaunded him to be taken from the fyre, whiche than began to flame: and ſo with great difficultie he was deliuered. Afterwarde Cyrus enterteyned him honourably, and vſed his counſaile, which in many thinges he founde very profytable.

He wrastled, and ranne no man better. In armes stronge, hardye and valiaunt. In martiall policie, equal to any than lyuinge: wonnderfull well learned in philosophie, especially in that Pythagoras taughte, the most diffuse and pure doctrine, conteining most secreate & diuine misteries, whervnto he added moste noble vertues. For he was temperate, wyse, of great grauitie, vsyng tyme wysely, of courage inuincible, so diligent in obseruyng trouth, that he woulde at no tyme lye, neyther in earnest nor in game. He was continent, mercyfull, wonderfull patient, suffering wronges both of the people, and of his friendes. He was secreate and trusty, so faythfull and louynge to his friendes, that whan any of theim were takẽ in warres, or any of their daughters ready to bee maried, and they not able to sette them forth, accordyng to their degrées: he would assemble the residue of his friendes, and exhorte theim to geue vnto hym that lacked, according to their powers. He himselfe woulde liberally geue to the quantitie of his substaunce, whiche was but little, although he were in great authoritie (for he refused all rewardes, saynge thankes onely) & whan he hadde made a good summe of that, whiche was graunted, before he receyued it, he broughte hym that shoulde haue it, vnto the geuers, that he moughte receiue it of theim, and knowe how much he was bounde vnto euery of theim. He oftentymes refused great summes of money and ryche presentes sente to him by princes (although he were poore) saiyng: If the thing were honest which he was required to doe, he would doue it because it was good, without any rewarde: If it were yll, or not honest, all the gooddes of the worlde should not make hym doue it: If it weare profitable to his countrey, he was bounden and ready to doue it freely: If it weare otherwyse, all the rychesse in the worlde moughte not counteruayle the loue that he bare to his commune weale. In eloquence no Thebane mought be compared vnto hym, and his sentences weare graue, and verey compendious, wherby in counsayles he vanquished and put to rebuke greate and famous oratours. In battayle he ouercame the Athenians and the Lacedemonians, and in one day had the victory of all Grœce. At the last, in the battayle at Mantinea, betwẽne the Thebans and the Lacedemonians, he was striken & wounded to death with a longe speare, the head remayning styll in his bodye: yet retayned he lyfe, vntyll it was tolde hym that his holke had the victorie. Than sayde he, I haue lyued longe enough, for I dye vnbanquysshed. The yron being drawen out of his bodie, he died, before the incarnation of Christ. 372. yere. This one thing is well to be considered (as Probus sayeth) the citee of Thebes, before Epaminondas was borne, and also after he was dead, was vnder the rule and insubiection of other people. But durynge the tyme that he was a gouernour in the weale publyque, the citie was head and gouernour of al Grœce: wherby it may be wel perceiued, that one suche noble man is more than a whole citie.

Heráclitus, A philosopher, whiche alwayes wepte when he beheld the people, consyderyng howe busy they were to gather treasure, and how negligent in the well bryngyng vp of their childrē: His warkes of a purpose were obscure and hard to be vnderstande. When he was olde, he fel into a dropsie, in whiche neglecting phisitions he wrapped himselfe in cowe dunge, and so lyinge aslepe in the sunne, was torne and deuoured of dogges. He had no maister, but by his owne nature and diligence preuayled to great knowlage: He lyued in tyme of the last Darius, and wrate many thynges of philosophie in verses. Herculeè, Lyke Hercules.

Herculeius, A Romayne, whiche fauoured the parte of Marius.

Hercules, Semeth to be a generall name geuen to men excellynge in strengthe all other of their tyme. Cicero De natura deorum wryteth, that amongest auncient writers were founde sir Hercules. Varro affirmeth, there were three and forty. Finally there is no notable mention made but of two, the one called Hercules Aegiptius or Libycus, whiche is supposed to be Osyris, of whom is written hereafter. The other (longe after hym) was sonne of Iupiter and Alcmena, called Alcides by his proper name. And for his incomparable strengthe and labours (taken for the common profitte of mankynde) he was named also Hercules. All be it Berosus affirmeth Hercules to be the sonne of Osyris, and kyng of Aegypte, and was called Hercules Libycus, because he conquered Libya. Saint Hieromeon the tenth chapiter of Genesis wryteth, that this Hercules performed the twelue notable laboures, whiche poetes wryte of, and not Alcides, sonne of Alcmena. The first labour (as Diodorus wryteth) was the sleayng of a lyon in the wooode Nemea, that farre exceaded all other Lyons in greatnesse, whiche mought not be slayn with metall, nor stone: wherefore he was constrayned to slea him with his handes. The secõd labour was the kylling of Hydra the monster, in the fennes of Lerna, whiche had an hundred neckes with serpentine heades, and whan one was striken of, there did aryse eftsones .y. other heades. The thirde labour was the taking of the great wylde boze of Erymanthus, whiche wasted the countrey of Arcadia, and all people drad him. But finally Hercules toke hym alyue, and bearing him on his shoulders, brought him vnto kyng Euristheus. The fourth labour was the battaile whiche he had alone with the great nõbre of men called Centauri, that weare of great strength and swifte as horses: all theim he slew, whan they assaulted him. The fifth was the takyng of the great harte in rẽning, which for his swiftenesse had his hornes gylted. The first was the destruction of the byrdes Stymphalides, which consumed the fruites and grayne of the countreis adioynyng. The seuenth was the makyng cleane of the ore stalle of Augea kyng of Elis, whiche would receiue. 3000. oxen at once, and had not bẽn clensed or ridde in .30. yeres: so that it myght seme vnpossible to haue it clensed: the whiche not withstanding Hercules performed by wysdome, conueighing into it the ryuer Alpheus: whiche by the swyft course of the streame, in one daye caried awaye the dounge, without any reproche vnto Hercules. The eight was the brynging of a Bull from Creta into Grece, ouerawyng him along the sea. The nynthe was the takyng of Diomedes kyng of Thracia, and castyng hym to his horses, who fedyng them with mans flesshe, was himselfe of them deuoured. And after Hercules breakyng those wylde horses, and makyng them gentill, brought them to Euristheus. The .x. labour was his voyage into Spayne, and sleaing of Geryon and his sonnes, and takyng the great kyne, whiche he gaue to a kyng in that countrey, who continually afterwarde, did yerely offer in sacrifice, to the honour of Hercules, one of the bulles, that came of those kyne. The eleuenth was his goyng into hell, & fetchynge thence Theseus and Pirithous, and brynging with him in a chayne Cerberus, the dogge of hell, hauyng three heades. The twelfth and last labour was the takyng of the golde appulles, out of the gardeynes Hesperides, and sleayng the terryble dragon, whiche continually watchyng kepte those appuls, whiche were called golden for the beauty of theim. Some saye they weare shepe, whose fleces were of the colour of golde, and the dragon signifieth the diligence and strengthe of the shepeherde, whiche kepte theim. These were the twelue labours of Hercules, whereof grewe this prouerbe.

Herculei labores*, where the labours dooe seme impossible to be atchieued.

Herculis cothurnos*, was vsed for a prouerbe, wherein a thynge of lytle importaunce was set forth with great eloquence or other thynge solemne, more apte for a greater matter, as one should put Hercules hosen on a chyldes legges. Wherwith accorded the saiyng of the wise kyng Agesilaus, whan one commẽded to hym a Rhetorician, whiche by his crafty eloquence made trifles & small thynges to seme great, The king answered: That sowter deserueth no praise, which putteth a great shoe on a very litle foote: meaning thereby, that the worckes shoulde as well accorde with the matter, as the garment with the person. This is so common a vice now a dayes among studentes of eloquence, that in wrytinge and speakyng, they seme to prepare the hose before they knowe the measure of the legge, wherein they wyll put it.

Hercules Gallus, As Lucianus wryteth, was in the olde tyme in Fraunce an ymage made lyke an olde man, with a balde head, and vnkempte, his heare very whyte, the skynne of his face ryuelled, and as it were burned with the sunne, wearyng on hym a Lyons skynne, and bearyng in his right hande a great clubbe, in his lefte hande a bowe, a quiuer at his backe, drawynge after hym a multitude of people, tyed by their eares with a little chayne wrought with aumbre and golde, but they weare so easyly tied, that laughyng and with good chere they willingly followed, and as it semed, woulde not be louse: and the other end of the chayne was tied at Hercules tongue, who loked towardes theim with a laughing countenaunce. This ymage signified eloquence, whiche for the puissaunce thereof, resembled rather Hercules thā Mercurie. And his age betokened, that for the moste parte eloquēce is substantiall and vehement. That Hercules, or rather eloquence draweth men by the eares tied to his tōgue, signifieth the affinitie betwen the tongue and the eare: and their glad and voluntary folowyng, signifieth with what delectation eloquence draweth men vnto hir perswasions and exhortations.

shoes, patens, and coate wrought of the fynest threde, with three threde stitches, a baudrike of baudeken, with chaungeable colours and sundry pictures, a mantell of whyte ouer all, a ryng on his fynger with a stone, wherin was a signet moste perfectly wrought. All this did he worke with his owne handes. Also he carted with him a little oyle bottell, with a narrowe mouth, and the residue rounde and flat, with a little instrumente to stryke sweate from his body hangyng therat. He played excellently on euery instrument, and sange his owne verses in all kyndes, whiche no man coulde amende. In all partes of logike, rhetorike, and philosophie, he banquyshed many, and was banquyshed of none. He ranne, wrastled, & did other feates of actiuitie, that all men beholding hym were therewith abasshed. Finally, he semed not to be ignorant, weake or vnable in any thyng. Not withstanding Plato in twoo dialogues bryngeth in Socrates disputing with him. In the one in searchyng what beautie is, in ỹ other what a lie is, he concludeth and proueth Hippias to be an arrogant and ignorant fole, for as muche as praysing beautie, he wyste not what beautie was, and boastyng that he before any other mā could discerne a lyer from a true man, he coulde not make of them a definition. By this it appeareth howe muche the common iudgement of men varieth, and is inferiour to the iudgement of a perfecte wyse man, as Socrates was.

This John was of ſuche perfection and holyneſſe, that our Sauioure Chriſte teſtifyed of hym, that he went in the ſpirite and trouth of Helias the prophete: but yet but yet was he more then a prophete, & the messanger promised by the prophete Malachias, that god would sende, which should prepare the way before him. Semblably Iohn testified of Christe, that he was the sonne of God. Iohn lyued in wyldernesse, his garmente was of Camelles heares, hir gyrdell of a skynne about his loynes, his meate Locuste, and hony of the woodes. He baptysed onely by water, teaching repētance and the approchinge of the kyngdome of heauen. But because he sayde to Herode, it was not lefull for him to haue his brothers wyfe, he was by him put in pryson, and finally at the petition of the daughter of Herodiades, who daūsed before him (by the perswasiō of Herodiades, who was his brothers wyfe) his head was stryken of, & in a dishe brought by the mayden vnto hir mother in open banket. Iosephus antiquitatum. lib. 18. calleth him a very good man, who commaunded the Iewes to labour to gette vertue, to kepe true religion towarde god, and by baptisme to ioygne together in one. Also he saieth that many men thought, that in the battaile betwene Herode and Aretha, by the iust vengeance of god, for puttyng Iohn Baptist to death, the hoste of Herode was vtterly destroyed. He was borne somewhat before the natiuitie of Christ, and was put to death before Christ suffered his passion, one yere.

He wrate also of the antiquitie of the Jewes. He was amonge the Romaines had in such re-uerence and honour, that his ymage was sette vp in the citie. He had the spyrite of prophecie, and beynge prysoner, tolde vnto Uespasian, that he shoulde be emperour of Rome. Also in his booke of antiquitées, he wryteth in this wyse: At this tyme was Jesus, a wyse man, if it be le-full to call him a man, he was a doer of wonder-full worthes, and a teacher of those men, whiche willingly doo here thinges that be true: he joyg-ned vnto him many Jewes, and also Gentiles: this man was Christ. Whan Pilate, by the en-uy of the chiefe men of our nation, had iudged him to be put on the crosse, he forsoke not them, whom from the begynnyng he loued, but appée-red to them the thyrde day, eftesones alyue, ac-cordynge as the prophetes by diuine inspiration spake before of him, and that innumerable my-racles shoulde be done by him. Hitherto wrate Josephus: wherby appéreth his excellent wise-dome, and speciall grace, which he had receiued: and it repugneth not much, that in his heart he embraced the fayth of Christ. He was after the incarnation of Christ. lxvi. yeres.

By whiche wyshe graunted, he tourned castelles and towers into golde. But when he came to eate his meate, and sawe that it also was made golde, being almost famished, he besought Bacchus agayne to take from hym the graunt that he hadde geuen hym. Bacchus therefore willed hym to goe washe hymselfe in the ryuer Pactolus: wherby the couetous king washed away his golden wyshe, and the ryuer euer after had small shardes of golde appearing in it. Afterwarde when the rusticall God Pan, chalenged to contende in musike with Apollo, and Tmolus the iudge appointed of that controuersie had geuen sentence on Apollos syde: All other that weare present dyd alowe his iudgement as good and true, onely kynge Midas reproued it, and in his estimation preferred Pan with his screakyng pypes. Wherewith Apollo beynge very wrathe, in reproche of his grosse iudgement, made him to haue long eares lyke an asse. But Midas kepte them so secreat, that neuer man knewe it, sauynge onely his barbour. Who not able to conceale so vncouthe and straunge a thing, and yet not so bolde to publyshe it for feare of the kynges displeasure, went into the fielde, and diggyng an hole in the grounde, cried out Auras asininas habet rex Midas, that is, true it is that kynge Midas hath longe eares lyke an asse. In processe of tyme reedes dyd growe in that place: whiche, when they weare blowen with the wynde, dyd yelde the same voyce that Midas his barbour hadde there vttered, and so (saye poetes) became it first knowen, that Midas had an asses eares. By this deuise poetes signifie that Midas, as a tyranne, had many harkeners and tale bearers, by whom he vnderstoode all that was donne or spoken of hym in all partes of his dominion, as if he had had longe eares to heare what euery man had sayde.

Origenes, called also Adamantius, (borne at Alexandria in Aegypte) Was sonne of one Leonides the martyr, a man of moste excellente doctrine and vertue from his childehode: who beynge on slepe, his father came into the chamber, and takynge awaye the clothes softely, kissed the breast of the infant, as a temple, hauyng within it the holy ghoste, and gaue thankes to god, that he had geuen him suche a sonne. When his father was martyred, Origen beynge but a ponge childe, and yet desyrous of martyrdome, ranne amonge other that weare leede to bee slayne, and by all meanes profered himselfe to die with them. But his mother (who loued him moste entierly) perceyuynge the mattier, dyd firste lamentably intreate him to withdrawe him, but his desyre of martyrdome was the more encreased therby. Wherefore in the night when he was in his bed, she stale away his clothes, so that in the morynge when he woulde haue gone forth, he might not come by them: wherefore he was constrayned to tary at home. Of the whiche deceipte of his mother, he complayned to his father in prysō, desyringe him to persiste constantlye in his good purpose. After the death of his father, he gaue himselfe continuallye to the studie of holy scrypture, whiche he had tasted before by his fathers instruction. And yet, before he was. xx. yeres olde, he excelled all men of his tyme, as well in philosophie, as all other sciences. At the age of. xviii. yeres he expounded gentile authours openlye, wherein he so enterlaced the holy scripture, that he conuerted many greate learned men to the fayth of Christe. His lyuynge was so straynte and vertuous, that he drewe many vnto him, and was amonge all men had in a woonderfull reuerence. He neuer ceassed in all persecutions to comforte and confyrme men in the embracynge of martyrdome, and dydde continually reade openlye, and also wrote innumerable bookes in the expoundynge of holy scripture. He wente into dyuers countreis to preache, and for his greate fame, Mammea the mother of the noble emperour Alexander Seuerus, sente for him to Rome, and hearde him, and (as some suppose) was by him conuerted. He obserued all the preceptes of the gospell moste straytely, in continuall fastinges and watchinges, hauing but one garmente, goynge alwaies barefoote, counsaylynge all his hearers to renounce all that they had, and to geue it in almesse. Also he gelded himselfe, not onely to be the more chaste, but also (because in the time of persecution, he taught the worde of god, as well privyly as openly to men and women) to lette the payntyng to speake dishonestē of him, and these that repayred to his sermons and lessons: whiche althoughe he dyd secreately, yet god woulde not haue it hyd, so that it came to the eare of Demetrius the byshop of Alexandria, who, first wonderynge at the stomache and vertue of the man, prayssinge the feruentnesse of his fayth, sayde vnto him: Now sticke to thy doctrine and preachynge, sence thou hast lefte vnto thyne aduersaries none occasiō of suspitiō. But afterward the same Demetrius stirred with enuie, layed it in reproche against him openly, fyndyng nothyng elles wherewith to dispraise him. He that wyll knowe more of Origen, let him reade the vi. booke De historia Ecclesiastica, and saincte Hierome De scripto. eccles. He was after the incarnation of Christe. 204. yeres.

Paris, Kynge Priamus his sonne of Troye, whose mother being with childe dreamed, that she was deliuered of a fyre brande: whiche thynge the southsaiers interpreted, that the childe, she went with, should be the confusion of Troy. Wherefore, when he was borne, kynge Priamus commaunded him to be destroied, but Hecuba of motherly pitie, procured him to be priuily brought vp of a shepehearde in mount Ida. This man is alwaye described of Homere as a more pleasaunt carpet knight, then stoute warriour, and more delighting in instrumentes and dalliaunce, then Martial prowesse and chiualrie. Wherfore poetes write of hym, that, when Juno, Pallas, and Venus, weare at controuersie for the golden appull, that lady Discorde did caste among theim to be geuen to the fayrest, they weare appointed by Jupiter to vse the iudgement of this Paris being then a shepehearde in Ida. Juno to haue the prayse, profered him a noble kyngdom, Pallas promysed the gifte of wysedome, and Venus the fayrest ladie, that then liued in the earth. Paris not estéming either in Juno pryncely regyment, or in Pallas noble wysedome, as the dearlynge of Venus, gaue to hir the price of greatest beautie. After he had long tyme lyued as a shepehearde, he was at the last knowen, & receiued into his fathers fauour, and vnder pretence of ambassade sayled into Grécia, where by his amarous behauour in the court of kyng Menelaus, whyle he was absent, he allured his beutifull wyfe Helena to forsake hir husbande, and to goe with him to Troye. Whiche vncourteous villany in so noble a prince as he was estemed to be, the Grékes did take so greuously, that they by othe conspired in reuengement thereof to make a voyage against Troye, and neuer to retourne till they had brought that noble kyngdome to confusion.

Wherfore at the warre of Troye (when Achilles did kepe his tent, and would not fight, in displeasure that Agamemnon had taken lady Briseis from hym) This Patroclus, the more to feare the Troiãs, borowed the armure of Achilles, whom he knew they dradde full sore, and in the same fighting in the fielde, was slayne of Hector. For sorowe wherof Achilles (that before could by no meanes be perswaded) to reuenge his friendes death as a fierse tyger came agayne into the fielde, and there metyng with Hector, after long fight chased him on foote round about ỹ walles of Troy, and at the last slewe hym, and in the sight of his wretched father Priamus, drue him by an horse tayle about the walles, and after .xij. daies space scantly with a great summe of money could bee perswaded to suffer hym to be buried.

Paulus, A name of dyuers Romaynes: one was moste excellent, named Paulus Aemilius, sonne of Lucius Paulus. He ascendyng by all dignities vnto Consull, was cayptayne of the warres in Spayne, where he fought two battayles, wherin were slayne. 30000. Spaniardes, and wonne 250. walled townes, & not withstanding returned to Rome, not one grote the rycher: for he was lyberal and sumptuous, and not very riche. Afterwarde he made warre against the Liguriens, whiche were about Jeane, where hauynge with hym but onely. 8000. he put to flyghte. 30000. and brought them to subiection. Finally, he fought againste and vanquysshed Perses kynge of Macedonia, and brought hym and his chyldren prysoners to Rome, and tryumphed in this fourme. The Senatours apparayled in whyte sylke, satte at stages about the market place, to beholde the tryumphe: all the temples were set opẽ, and filled with flowers and swete persumes: the triumphe was diuided into three dayes. The first daie vnneth suffised to the beholdyng of ymages, as wel peinted as wrought in stone and metal, by moste excellent workemẽ, whiche were caried in. 250. chariottes. The seconde daye was brought forth the harneys and artyllary of the Macedons, and the apparayle of horses, whiche was in suche sorte, that it was in a maner terrible to the vãquisshers to beholde. After folowed. 3000. men, whiche bare syluer coyne in. 350. vessels of syluer, euery vessell beyng in weyght three talentes, whiche was. 240. li. after. 80. li. to euery talente, euery vessell was borne of foure men. Other dyd beare great cups and pottes of syluer. The thyrde daye the trumpettes came before blowyng bloudy soundes. After theim came. 100. oxen, their hornes gylte, and therebyon were set fillettes and garlandes, and were led with yonge men, gyrte and prepared to sacrifice them: and chyldren bare cuppes of golde and syluer, to serue to the sacrifice. After them folowed they that bare money of golde in golden vesselles, euery of theim weyghynge three talentes. Also the nombre of the vessciles were. 240. Than folowed they that caried the potte, whiche Aemilius had let make all of precious stones, weyghyng tenne talentes, whiche was. 800. li. Also they that bare all the plate of the kynges Antigonus, Seleucus, Thericius, & Perses, whiche was innumerable. After came the chariot, wherin was Perses harneys, with his diademe set therupon. Soone after his two sonnes, and one daughter led, and wyth theim a great numbre of nourrces, maisters, and gouernours, wepyng and holding vp their handes to the people. Whereof many were moued to teares, so that the triumphe semed to bee mingled with gladnes for the victorie, with heauynesse for compassion. After his chyldren and seruauntes folowed forthwith Perses in a blacke garmēt, tremblyng & troubled in spirite: whom insued a great company of his counsailours and officers, beholding him sorowfully with teares, whiche more constraygned the Romaynes to wepe, for pytie that they hadde of their misery. After him were borne foure hundred crownes of golde, whiche were gyuen to Aemilius by the cities of Grece for his vertue and prowesse. Thā folowed Aemilius himselfe, sitting in a chariot, veray rychely apparayled, hauing a robe of purple tinset, and bearyng in his hande a braunche of laurelle, as a man beside that honour worthy to be looked on. Than after came the men of warre, whiche had bēn with hym, in order of suche bendes and companies as belonge to battayle, euery of theim bearynge in his hande a braunche of laurelle, and singyng verses myxte with mery tauntes: Some singyng the prayses of Aemilius, whom they beheldc, and wounderd at for his excellent qualities. But now beholde, Aemilius being in that state and condition, that nothing lacked in him that man coulde wysshe for: yet his lyfe was not without aduersities. He hauing fower sonnes, of the whiche he had giuen twoo in adoption to Scipio Affricanus, & Fabius Maximus: the other twoo he kepte at home with him: The one of theim died. v. daies before the triumphe, beinge sixtene yeres olde: The other beynge twelue yeres olde, dyed the thirde daye after the triumphe. The whiche cruelte of fortune all men lamented, that hadde brought so great heauinesse into the house replete with suche gladnesse, reioycing, and noble renoume, and had meddled teares, sorowes, and lamentation with victorie, ioye, and triumphe. But therefore Aemilius neuer abated his courage, but calling the people together, made to theim a noble oration, declaringe that he was nothyng deceyued by fortune, for as muche as whan she semed to him most fauourable, he thā more feared hir than any thyng elles: And although she had taken from hym good sonnes, whom he appointed to succede him, yet since she had shewed hir extreame malice to hym and his bloud, he had good hope nowe, that the people of Rome should remayne prosperouse without any peryll. O noble herte, O valiaunt courage, worthy to be left in remēbrance. He brought so much gold & siluer into the treasorie of the Romaines, that there nēded no taske to be set on the people. lxxx. yeres after and aboue: yet he left in patrimonie vnneth. 592. li. and in treasure littell or nothyng. This history I haue wrytten for the notable thynges therein conteigned, with the vnsuretie of prosperitie, wherin al men are blinded, that desyre to haue it. One thyng would be remembred. Although Aemilius were a fauourer of the nobilitie, yet was he better beloued of the people, than was Scipio, who onely studied to serue their purposes. For his humanitie equally mixte with graultie, he was brought to the earth, not with sumptuous preparation, but with loue and fauour, not onely of his countrey men, but also of his ennemies. For as many of Liguria, Spayne, and Macedonia, as were than at Rome, they that were yonge and strenge dyd beare the corps, the olde men folowed, callynge him benefactour and conseruatour of their cities and countreis.

Paulus, The apostle of Christe, borne in Iudea, in a towne called Ciscalis, of the tribe of Beniamin, the towne beyng taken by the Romaynes, went with his parentes to Tarsus a citie of Cilicia, & dwelled there. But afterwarde he was sent by theim to Hierusalem to learne the lawes, and was there taught of one Gamaliel, a great learned man. He being with other at the martyrdome of saint Steuen, receiued letters of the bishop, willyng hym to goe to Damascus, there to persecute theim that beleued in Christe. And in the waye, he was by reuelation chaunged, from a persecuter to a vessell of election. Afterwarde whan he had conuerted Sergius Paulus (than beynge Proconsull at Cypres) to the faythe of Christe, by hym he was called Paulus, where before he was named Saulus. Fynally, he suffered martyrdome by beheadyng, after the passion of Christe. xxxvj. yeres, and the. xiiij. yere of the reigne of Nero. Hæc Hieronymus & Sophronius. The residue of his lyfe appeareth in the actes of the Apostles. His learning and mistical wysedom, is well shewed in his epistles, in the whiche (as saint Peter sayeth) be some thynges harde to be vnderstande, and that men vnlearned and incōstaunt dooe depraue, lyke as they doee the other partes of scripture, to their owne perdition.

Pericles, A noble and valiaunt capitaine of the Athenians, excellent in witte and naturall eloquence: he was instructed in philosophie by Anaragoras, so that therby he atteined vnto meruaylous great knowlage, noble courage and pacience, in so muche that whan a lewde person followed him to his house, reuiling him al the way: whā he was come to his doore (than being night) Pericles commaunded one of his seruauntes to take a torche, and bring him (who had rebuked him) home to his house. Also he beynge in great estimation and authoritie among the people of Athens, would neuer be at any feastes or bankettinges, nor receyue of any mā, any presentes or giftes, nor did goe to euery assemble or counsell, or beyng there, did speake or reason in euery matter, but reserued himselfe to thinges of very great importaunce. And yet seemed he than to be very timorouse. But yet his eloquence was so excellent, his voyce and pronunciation so pleasaunt, his sentences so ponderouse & vehement, that he neuer spake, but that therto al men consented. And therefore it is written of him, that he did fulminate his woordes, that is to saye, that they proceded from hym as thunder, and lightnynge. He was of suche temperaunce, that although he semed to haue all the Atheniens at his commaundement, yet he neuer increased his owne reuenues the worthe of one farthyng, but augmented the commune treasure exceedingly. And such spoyle as came to his part in ỹ warres, he did employe vpon graynе and victayle, diuidyng it among the people in the tyme of necessitie. He was vnfortunate onely in his owne children, his eldest sonne Xantipp⁹ persecuting him with sundry displeasures, and openly mockyng hym. Notwithstandinge (as it was reason) he died miserably before his father. Finally Pericles being sycke vnto death, the noble men came to comfort hym, speakyng softely they communed of his prowes, where he had victory in nyne great battayles. He hearing what they spake, sayed vnto theim: that he much merualled, that they so greatly extolled that thyng, whereof the more parte perteyned to fortune, and had happened to diuers other capitaynes as well as to hym, and that they spake nothing of that which was most to be praised. For neuer man, saied he (by myne occasion) had cause to put mournynge garment vpon him. Plutarchus in vitis. He was afore the incarnation of Christ. 441. yeres.

Philippus, i, A kyng of Macedonie, sonne of Amyntas, father of great Alexander: A prynce from his childehodde of excellente wytte and power, of whom these notable thynges be remembred. After he had vanquysshed the Athenians at Chæronea, he began to reioyce of his felicitie. But to the entente that he therefore should not be the more prone to iniuries towarde his subiectes, nor to haue indignation at theim, whom he vāquisshed: he then and euer after caused a childe to come to his chaumbre doore in the morninge, and to saye aloude, Philip, thou art a man mortall. Whiche he obserued so constantly, that he neuer went out of his chambre, or receyued any counsaylous or suiters, tyll the childe hadde thryse spoken these woordes, not withstandynge that he was a Paynime. Also where one named Pachætas, hadde a matter in variaunce before hym, Philippe takynge lyttell heede, what was spoken, and sometyme slépyng slæping, at the last gaue iudgement against Pachetas: who cryng out with a loude voyce, appealed. Wherwith Philip beig sore moued, with a grieuouse loke, saied: to whom doest thou appeale? I appeale, (said Pachetas) vnto your self, but beynge better awaked, & taking hede what is spoken. Philippe being throughly awaked, and hearing eftsones the mattier, perceiued that Pachetas had wronge, and wouldo not reuerse the iudgement, but the summe of money, wherin Pachetas was condemned, he payde of his owne treasure. In this man it is notable howe sundrie vertues were tempered with diuers vices. He was a prynce more geuen to costly prouision of warrefare, then sumptuousnes in banketting: and therfore his greatest riches was in the fourniture and habilimentes of warre. He was more cunning to get ryches, then circumspect to kepe theim: and therfore, not withstãding his continual spoyles, he was alway nedy. Mercie and treacherie in like maner he esteemed. No way semed to him dishonorable, wherby he might attain victorie. Faire language he would vse, where occasion serued, and likewise pretend displeasure, where he hated not. In talke and cõference craftie, & more would promise in wordes then in dede performe. Very skilfull bothe in pleasaunt iesting, and also earnest debatinge of weightie affayres. Frindship he measured more by profite, then by faithfull dealing. To pretend fauour where he hated, and to sette hatred betwene frindes, seking for fauour on both sides, was his common custome. With these thinges, was ioigned so excellẽt language and vtterãce, as neither readinesse of tongue wanted fine ornamentes of eloquence, neither flowyng speach sharpe inuentiõ of wittie matter. In warrefare subtile & guilefull, wise in counsayle, desyrous to be loued, & well able to represse his anger: somewhat to muche geuen to drinking, and vpon the heate therof diuers times in warre would sierly set vpon his enemies, and offer himselfe to more daunger thẽ neded. Wherby he was often woũded, and in perill of his life. By these properties he layde the foundation of that empire of the worlde, whiche afterward was made perfite by his famous sonne Alexander: who was both in vertues and vices more notable then euer his father was. He was afore the incarnation of Christe. 358. yeres.

But when the Græcians were earnest on him, he cõfessed that he was dead. Then was he himselfe caused to goe to Troye, because he onely knewe the vse of those poysoned arrowes, and by misfortune did let fall one of ẏ arrowes on his foote. Phocion, Diſciple to Plato and Xenocrates, one of the chiefe gouernours of the citie of Athens, a manne of ſuche wounderfull grauitie, and conſtancie, that he was not lyghtly ſeene to chaunge his countenaunce, either to laugh or to mourne, nor to haue his handes out of his habyte, excepte in warre: and whan he was in the countrey, he went alwaye barefooted, except it were in the colde wynter, whereof there was no better token, than to ſee Phocion goe ſhodde. His ſpeche was ſhorte, graue, behemente, and full of quicke ſentences: and therefore the moſt eloquent oratour Demoſthenes called him the hatchet that did cutte of his woordes. He was of ſuch a conſtancie, that where Apollo at Delphos made aunſwere, that one man in Athens was of a contrarie opinion to all the citie: whã that was reported, Phocion roſe vp and ſaied: Leaue countreymen to ſearche whom your god meaneth: for I am that one man, whome nothyng liketh, whiche is nowe doone in the common weale of this citie. Whan he had made an oration to the people, and they prayſinge hym conſented to hym, he turned to theim that were nert him, and ſayed: Alas what haue I doone, I feare leſt ſome foolyſhe woorde hathe eſcaped me vnwares: ſignifyynge, that the people ſeldome allowed any thyng that was good, or not foolyſhe. On a tyme whan he reaſoned contrarie to the mynde of the people, wherefore they murmured, and woulde haue let hym: It is at your pleaſure countreymenne, ſaied he, to compelle me to dooe that that I woulde not, but to ſpeake otherwyſe then I thynke, that no man liuyng can cauſe me. He was ſo reuerend a perſonage, that the great kynge Alexander, in the beginnyng of his letters, after he had banquiſhed Darius, ſaluted no man but him, and Antipater. He refuſed infinite treaſure ſente vnto hym by Alexander, and although he had bẽ the generall capitaine of the Atheniens in ſundrie warres, and honourably atchiued his enterpriſes, yet was he beſte content to lyue poorely. Finally, he was of his vnkynde countreymen condemned to death, wherto he wente with the ſame countenaunce that he hadde in auctoritie. Whan one, whiche was condemned with hym, lamented and feared to die, Phocion turnyng to hym, ſayed: why, arte thou not glad, that thou ſhalt dye with Phocion? And whan one of his kyndes aſked hym, if he woulde any thynge to his ſonne: I would (ſaied he) that ſuche wronge as the Atheniens dooe to me, he ſhould not remembre. Lyng in his cradell, bées were founden to bring hony into his mouthe, without hurting the childe: whiche diuinours did interprete, to signifie, that from him should flowe eloquence moste swēte and delectable. Socrates dreamed, the night before he was brought to him to be instructed, that he helde betwēne his knées a whyte cygnet, who hauinge feathers quickely growen, flewe vp towarde heauen, and filled the ayre with moste swēte tunes: So the daye after, Plato being brought by his father, Socrates beholdynge hym well, sayed: This is the byrde, whose ymage I beheld the laste nyght. His name was firste Aristocles, and after called Plato, because (as some suppose) he was broade in the shoulders: other write, because he had a broade visage. In his youth he exercised wrastlyng and other feates of actiuitie: and

tyll

tyll he was. xx. yeres olde, he gaue himselfe to make amorous verses, which, after he came to heare Socrates, he threwe into the fyre and burned, and than moste ardently and attentiuely hearde Socrates doctrine, durynge the tyme that he lyued. After that, he not onely hearde the moste famous philosophers and Geometricians in Grece, but also wente into Italy, into Affrike and Aegypt, to here the mysticall sciences. And it is thought, that he hearde some of the prophetes, sence there bee founden in his workes sentences not abhorrynge from our catholike faithe. He was experte in martiall affayres, for he had fought in three great battayles. He chose a place by Athens, called Academia, where he taught: and therefore his disciples weare called Academici. There was in him a merualious sharpenesse of witte, with an incōparable dexteritee in disputynge, and makynge of aunsweres: his constancie, temperaunce and grauitee, with courteisie in language, weare of all other incomparable: he was so desyrous of knowlage, that he was no lesse studious to learne, then he was to teache. Wherefore beynge scorned of one, whiche asked of him, howe longe he woulde be a scholer, so longe (sayde he) as I repente not to be wyser and better. He is called diuinus Plato, for his excellente doctrine, whiche conteineth many thinges (as saint Augustine saieth) whiche accorde with holy scripture: so that therein is perceyued the first parte of Genesis, vnto Spiritus domini ferebatur super aquas, and the misterie of three persons in diuinitee is there expressed. Rómula, A trée, vnder the whiche Romulus and Remus were founde.
Romuleus, a, um, Of Romulus.
Romulidæ. The Romaynes.
Rómulus, As the Romayne stories affyrme, the son of Mars, by Ilia the daughter of Numitor, but more verily the sonne of Amulius his great vncle, who, of purpose rauished Ilia in the darke, beynge a virgine Vestale, to haue a quarell to put hir to death. For kynge Numitor had a brother named Amulius, of nature wicked, fierse, and cruell, who, not beynge contente to take the kyngdome from his elder brother, and cast him in prison, dyd also murder his sonne Lausus, and vnder colour of honour made his daughter Ilia a virgine Vestale vnder the bond of perpetuall chastitée, that she might not haue any issue. But she beynge afterwarde founde with childe by Mars, (as the Romaynes would haue men beléeue) was deliuered of two sonnes: whiche Amulius commaunded to be caste into Tyber, and their mother, accordynge to the lawe of the Vestales, to be buryed quicke.

As it happened at that tyme, the ryuer of Tyber was swollen ouer the bankes, so that men coulde not come to the dépe of the chanell. Wherefore they that had the charge of drownynge the children, caste them into the lande fludde, where the water sodeynly fallynge, lefte them alyue, and so weare they founde by Faustulus the kynges shépehearde, who broughte them home to be kept and nourished of his wife Laurentia, whiche, because she was a strumpette, was named of the shépeheardes Lupa. Whereof rose the fable, that the founders of the Romaine citie weare nourysshed of a shee woulfe. When these children came after to age, beynge instructed by Faustulus of their stocke and begynnynge, they gathered together a bande of shépeheardes, kylled Amulius, restored Numitor to his kyngedome, and on the mounte Palatine, where they weare broughte vp, beganne to builde them a newe citie. And because they weare twynnes bothe of one age, there fell controuersie betwéene them, whiche shoulde géue name to their newe citie. This contention so grewe, from woordes to tumulte and strokes, that in the bickeryng Remus was slayne. Although the more common opinion be, that he was put to death, because scornefully he leapte ouer the newe walles of the citie. Romulus, beynge then kynge alone, peopled his citie, by creatynge a sainctuarie for saufegarde of all trangressours that would come thither: ordeyned an hundred Senatours called fathers: procured wyues for his people, by rape of all the maydens of the countrey, resortynge thyther to solemne games and playes: ouercame the people of Cenina, and slue their kynge: banquysshed the Sabynes, and people of Atemna, and receyued theim into his citie, with other dyuers valiaunte actes. Whiche, when he hadde done, on a tyme callynge an assemblie at the marrice named Caprea, in a greatte tempeste sodaynely was gone, no man coulde tell howe: as it was thoughte, for his sterne gouernemente murdered priuyly of the Senatours, who, to please the people fayned, that he was a god, and named him Quirinus. Vnder whiche name the Romaines euer after worshipped him.

Rómulus, a, um, Of Romulus.
Roscius, A Romayne, and a player in comedies, whom for his excellencie in pronuntiation and gesture, the noble Cicero called his iewell, and so muche delyted in him, that he contended with him, whether Roscius coulde sette foorthe one sentence in mo facions of gesture and countenaunce, or he expresse the same sentence in a more diuersitée of eloquente woordes. The excellencie of this man in his arte, howe it was esteemed and fauoured of all the Romaynes, it appéreth well, in that they gaue to him for a continuall stipende, one thousande of their grotes for euery daye: whiche amounteth of our money to syxtéene pounde, thyrteene shyllynges and foure pence. And Lucius Sylla beynge Dictatoure, gaue to him a ryng of golde, whiche was the token of a knyghte at that tyme, as a coller or chayne of golde is at this tyme.

triumphed: and being a very yonge man, was demed of all the people of Rome to be the beste man in that citie. Two other were brethren, the sonnes of Publius Scipio. The one of them, L. Scipio, for the subduynge of Asia, was called Scipio Asiaticus: the other, P. Cor. Scipio, for vanquishing Annibal, and the people of Africa, was named Scipio Africanus Maior. This Publius Cor. Scipio, from his chyldehode was of a wonderfull towardenesse: for beynge but. xvij. yeres olde, in a great battayle by Pauie in Lumbardie, he rescued his father beyng enuyroned with ennemies, and in daunger to be slayne. Also after the discōfiture at Cannæ, where the more parte of the floure of chiualrie was slayne, because the residue of the yonge men concluded to haue forsaken Italy, this Scipio drewe out his swoorde, and compelled them to sweare, that they should not leaue the citie, but defende it. After that his father and vncle were slayne, all men fearyng to be capitaines in so daungerous warres, he stept foorth with a noble courage, profferyng himself to take that charge in hande: wherunto the Senate and people consented, he beynge then but xxij. yeres olde, they beholdyng in his personage and visage a beautie incomparable, his countenaunce mery and gentill, and in his gesture and pase to be a wonderfull maiestie, which was had in suche admiration throughout all the worlde, that after he had dryuen Annibal out of Affrike, subdued the citie of Carthage, and constreyned the great kyng Antiochus to desire peace of the Romaines, the warres beyng ceassed, men came out of all countreys to Rome, onely to see and honour hym, as one exceadyng the state of mortalitie: whereby suche enuie was stirred towarde hym, that he was accused for deteinynge of certaine treasure, whiche should haue bēn brought into the common treasourie: but he with a noble and valiant courage came before the people, and remembrynge what he hadde doone for the weale publike, required them to goe with him to the Capitoll to geue thankes to God for his victory: and so departing, all the people folowed hym, and lefte the iudges alone. But not withstanding he so grēuously tocke the ingratitude of the Senate and people, that he abandoned all common affayres, and went out of the citie of Rome to a manour place, whiche he had at Linternum, and there ended his lyfe, when he had liued. liij. yeres. Wainfletus, A worthy byſhop of Wynchester, and in his tyme Chauncelour of Englande, of counſayle wyſe, graue, politike, well learned himſelfe, and bothe in his tyme and after a great mayntainer of learnyng. He lyued in the troublous tymes of kyng Henry the ſixte, and Edwarde the fourth, in great eſtimation with the one, and in great diſpleaſure with the other: and therfore felte both the ſweete of proſperitie, and the ſower panges of aduerſitie. In his latter time, when he had attained quietneſſe, as a good byſhop, more mynding the increaſe of learnyng then his owne priuate wealth, to the great furtheraunce thereof, he builded the notable houſe of Marie Magdalene colledge in Oxforde. Out of the whiche, as a ſingular nourſerie of goodde letters, within fewe yeres haue been ſent into the churche, beſyde a great numbre of other wel learned, aleuen byſhops: and at this daye hath trauciling in the vineyarde of Chriſte, and plãting of his wourde, twoo godly byſhops, and diuers other zelous and very well learned. In this houſe becauſe I alſo was broughte vp in my youth, and by the benefite of the founder therof, attayned the ſmall portion of learnyng that god hath ſent me, I ought and doe acknowledge my ſelfe muche to be bounden to hym.
Wallia, The countrey of Wayles on the weſt ſyde of Englande, ſo lyyng out into the ſea, that it is compaſſed about with the ſame, ſauyng onely on the eaſt part: where, about Herefourde it is ioyned to this royalme, as a portion or member of the ſame, differing only in name and language. They be the remaynes of the olde Britones, that firſt inhabited this Ilande, and by the Saxones, when they greiue here of great power, weare conſtrayned to take that parte, as the moſt ſalfe from the inuaſion and diſquieting of their enemies. This haue I here put, not becauſe I thynke it is vnknowen to any Englyſh man, but to take an occaſion to clere my ſelfe of an vniuſt and falſe ſuſpicion, that by malicious and naughtie tongues hath been ſpredde of me, as though I ſhould not beare good mynde vnto that countrey, and that I haue wrytten againſt it in a Chronicle, that before tyme I haue ſette forth. If this vntrue ſurmyſe had ſtayed within the compaſſe of the common ſorte, I would not ſo muche haue paſſed for it (although I haue been manaſed dainger by them that neuer ſawe me): but for ſo muche as I heare it is crepte to thoſe that are both ryght honeſt and very wourſhipfull, I am conſtrayned in this place ſomewhat to touche it. What the thynge is, that particularly thei are grieued with, or how this matter firſte beganne, I knowe not. If any ſhall declare it vnto me, I will be gladde to ſatiſfie him. In the meane time I proteſte, I neuer had cauſe to hate them, and indeede doe ſo fauour theim, as my countrey men and faithfull ſubiectes vnder one prynce with me. If I haue vſed any terme, that to them may ſeme vnpleaſaunt (as in notyng the actes of Edwarde the firſte, I remẽber I call them vnſtable) I truſt ſobre and wyſe men wyll take that, as the truthe is, to be ſpoken vpon occaſion of thinges doone at that time onely, and not as a propertie adnered to the people. And yet is that not my terme, but Fabian alſo, whom in ſome parte I folowed, vſeth the ſame. Not withſtanding, I thinke he ment none otherwyſe then I dyd, that is, ſo to call them there, becauſe in that one kynges reigne they ſundrie tymes moleſted hym. But that is aboue 250. yeres ſens.

Wherefore I would exhorte all noble mē to reade his warkes studiously. I would god that he mought fynde a translatour either in Latin or English, whiche coulde expresse sufficiently the most delectable sentences cōteined in Greke.

Xenophontius, a, um, Of Xenophon.

Xerxes, A great and famous emperour of Persia, sonne of Darius, in ryches and power of men farre passing all other, but in noble prowes and vertue muche inferiour to his predecessours. Fiue yeres continually he made prouision for a voyage into Greece, to reuēge that great reproch and ouerthrowe, that his father, not many yeres before, had taken of Miltiades in the fieldes of Marathon. Wherefore, hauinge gathered together an armie, as some wryte, of seuentēne hundred thousand, or, as other more credibly affirme, of. 1000000. He conueyghed it ouer into Europe by making a bridge ouer the sea at Hellespont with his great multitude of shippes. Through this his huge and mightie power he bare himselfe so proudely, that he did not onely thynke al men ought to obey hym, but commaunded the seas also to bee quiet, and mountaynes to geue place vnto hym. The multitude of his armie & cattayle dranke certayne ryuers drie, & at their princes commaundement did cutte downe the mountayne Athos in Thrace, that they myght that way haue passage. Notwithstāding, shortly after, this mightie prince with all his power, on the sea by the Ile of Salamine ioygning battayle with the small nauie of the Grecians, was discomfited and put to flight, a great part of his armie destroyed, and himselfe for his safegarde with great feare gladde to flee in a fisher boate vnknowen: and so with muche dishonour returned home into Persia. Where, afterward, mistrusting the hasarde of warre, he gaue himselfe to delitious & sensuall lyfe, proposing large rewardes to such as did deuise any newe fantasie of riote to please his sensuall appetite. Zoilus, A malicious poete, that wrote a booke of railing verses against the noble wourkes of Homer, and therfore is called Homeromastix, that is, Homers scourge. When this Zoilus did reade his verses to the wourthy & learned kyng Ptolome, he taking therat great displeasure, at that present sayde not one wourde vnto him. Afterwarde this rayling poete being in great pouertie, desired of the kyng some relefe. Nay (sayeth Ptolomœ) Homer fœdeth & refreasheth many. Wherefore thou, that arte better then Homere, mayest well finde thy selfe without relefe of other. At the last he was condemned of heinous murder, and by the kynges commaũdement put to death. Of him, all malicious carpers of other mens wourkes be called Zoili.

Zopyrus, A noble Persiã, seruaũt to Darius, which whan the citie of Babylon rebelled against king Darius, and that he had made long warre, and could not subdue theim, vnwares to any man, did cut of his owne nose, his eares, & his lippes, and fledde to Babylon, saiynge, the kyng had so disfigured him, because he perswaded him to haue peace with the Babylonians: whiche they hearinge, made him their chiefe capitaine, by whiche meanes he afterwarde yelded the citie vp to Darius. Wherfore Darius was wonte to saie, that he had leuer haue one Zopyrus, than twenty Babylons. Hauinge on a tyme a pome granate in his handz, a friende of his asked, of what kynde of thinges he would desire to haue as great a number, as there weare kernelles in the pome granet: he answered of Zopires: estœming nothing to be of so great value as a multitude of so faithfull friendes, as he had shewed himselfe. An other Zopyrus, was excellently well seene in the science of phisiognomie, that is, by the proportion of ones visage and partes of the same, to conjecture his nature and conditions. This man happening into the companie of Socrates, whom he neuer knew before, was demaunded of thẽ present, what he thought of him. Vpon the vieme of his countenaunce he gaue this sentence, that Socrates was blunt & dull witted, sensuall, and geuen to sundrie fowle vices. Whereat some of theim, that weare present, wel knowing his wisedome & vertue, derided Zopyre: other were much greeued & displeased with him. Nay (sayeth Socrates) let his iudgement nothing moue you.
